

Nikesh
Hatuwal

Nepal

Engineering

Profile:

Progressed to: University of Hertfordshire, BEng Electrical and Electronic Engineering

I came to the UK from Nepal to study at Uxbridge College. I had a great experience at college and worked hard, which meant I had good enough results to progress on to the final year of a university degree.

The tutors at Uxbridge College were really helpful, and I was impressed with their way of teaching. It was quite different compared to how I was taught at home where all the learning was theoretical. At college there was practical learning as well, which helps you understand more. I liked the practical side and the college had good engineering workshops for this part of the qualification.

It costs a lot less to complete a degree if you start with an HND and then go to university in the final year, than if you spend three or four years at a university. My plan is to do a postgraduate degree in Engineering and Management, gain some work experience, and eventually go back to Nepal. I would definitely recommend Uxbridge College for an international student.

